NEW YORK UNIVERSITY School of Education

Folk Art and Folk Life in Education

Conference
June 29-July 2,
1997

For K-12 teachers and prospective teachers of art, social studies, and language arts and for museum and community educators. Folk Art—the indigenous and expressive activities of a people—offers you an exciting tool for teaching and learning!

Our conference brings teachers together with leading folk artists, folklorists, and folk art educators to explore ways of integrating American folk art into the classroom.

- Explore folk art as a dynamic student-centered approach to cultural and multicultural education
- Examine field-tested models for effective teaching
- Learn art forms from Native American, African American, and Latin American educators and how they teach their art to young people
- Tour the Museum of American Folk Art and other New York City galleries

Call for Model Curriculum Projects

Submission Deadline: April 1, 1997

Submit the written plan for your context-based study of an American folk art form(s) and a description of its implementation and the results. Educators whose work is selected receive a full scholarship and honors at the conference.

Early registration fee: $225; after May 30, 1997: $280.

Find out how you can earn 3 graduate credits.

Sponsored by the Department of Art and Art Professions.

Call (212) 998-5090 or fax (212) 995-4923.

New York University is an affirmative action/equal opportunity institution.
